The world of bulbs holds a multitude of visual delights and wonders to explore. When designing your garden it is fun to be creative by selecting bulbs that work well together and will complement their neighbours when they bloom. Companion plants tend to share similar planting requirements enabling them to grow well side-by-side, but you can also get creative by considering perfect colour, height and texture partnerships. When planning your garden it is important to consider the height that your bulbs will grow to and the appearance of their blooms.

slender stems, so their similar appearance will make for a charming collaboration. The slightly taller ethereal Ixia will certainly enhance this visual display, as it too produces dainty wand-like stems with bright star-shaped blooms. All of these bulbs flourish in semi-shade to full sun so will make ideal companion plants. Creating a spectacle of colour is one of the many joys of gardening with bulbs. You have a limitless palette to explore, so whether you wish to create vivid contrasts or soothing complementary displays, you have complete creative licence.

When planting a border many gardeners will plant shorter bulbs at the front and work backwards with the taller plants. However, if you wish to create a cluster of blooms of a similar height then consider pairing the lovely Tritonia with the vivid Sparaxis. These two exceptional bulbs are our 'Bulbs of the Week'. Both species flower with delicate star-shaped flowers on Hyacinths and their smaller relative, Muscari (grape hyacinth), make very pretty planting companions. Both Hyacinths and Muscari are available in white and blue this season. However, if you wish to create a more vibrant and intense exhibition of colour then plant yellow daffodils alongside Muscari. The brilliant blue of the grape hyacinths coupled with the bright yellow of the daffodils provides a spectacular contrast. The effect is simply breathtaking. The blooms that emerge from bulbs do so in all shapes and sizes, and these different textures can be used to great effect. The Freesia and Ipheion make a wonderful complementary duo for your border or rockery. The fragrant Freesia's elegant funnel-shaped flowers bloom upwards on long spikes and amongst a fan of lance-shaped foliage. The Ipheion, with its dainty sky blue and star-shaped blooms, can be planted in almost any kind of soil so will flourish next to its sweet-smelling companions. The delicate stars of the Ipheion complement the graceful trumpets of the bright and lively Freesia. Both of these winter wonders look their best blooming in groups, so plant a cluster of these in your garden for a spectacular display. The South African gardener has a wonderful selection of bulbs at their green fingertips and the array of colours and textures to experiment with is boundless. Companion planting will enhance the beautiful colours, shapes and textures in your garden, and no matter what effect you wish to create there will be the perfect bulb partnership for you.
