NWU & Wits: Special NUCLEAR Courses

The North West University (NWU) and the University of the Witwatersrand (Wits) are jointly going to launch a programme of short courses directed at providing professionals with further and specialised training in the field of nuclear energy (10 June 2011).

"We have signed a Memorandum of Understanding," NWU Engineering Faculty Dean Professor Johan Fick said. "We should be in a position to fully launch these short courses early next year." South Africa is planning a major programme of building new nuclear power plants – the Integrated Resource Plan, approved earlier this year. It states that nuclear power will provide 22.6% of the country's electricity, amounting to 9 600 MW, and that by 2030 – but the county has a shortage of certain key skills. "We [NWU and Wits] decided to do something," said Fick. "We're going to launch these short courses specifically aimed at the nuclear sector." The aim is to provide courses to established and young professionals in a format that would not significantly interfere with their work. Both universities already offer registered and certified short courses in other fields. Addressing a Nuclear Industries Association of South Africa (Niasa) meeting on Friday (10 June) on the training needs for nuclear new build and localisation, Fick highlighted that a Niasa survey had established that training in nuclear science, engineering and technology was well established in South Africa.

It also needs expertise in the requisite legislation, policy and politics, and in the business and economics of nuclear power.

"The gap [in South Africa] is professional training in the fields of policy and business issues," he stated.

The planned short courses are currently planned to cover the themes of nuclear governance, nuclear science, nuclear power technology, nuclear business and finance, global energy and the environment, and regulatory and policy issues. Each of these themes would be divided into a number of short courses. "The idea is to keep it as flexible as possible," affirmed Fick.

The joint programme will be coordinated by the Wits Enterprise unit of the Wits Professional Development Hub. Wits and NWU expect that, when the programme is up and running, other universities will join in.
