Lunar eclipse awes mankind

The Lunar eclipse, seen on 15 June 2011, was a great moment for millions of people across the world. The eclipse lasted for almost four hours. Many saw this as merely a breath-taking view, and others saw this as a time to pray.

The entire world witnessed the century's longest and darkest lunar eclipse. For many people, watching and reading about the lunar eclipse were quote an amusement. They spent the night awake gazing at the sky not to miss the rare moments of the celestial wonder.

But some others, mainly the devout followers of certain religions found it something perilous for the human life. In India, several religious groups believe that lunar eclipse is their god's punishment to human for committing sins.

The lunar eclipse of Wednesday kicked off at 22h45 in the country. It took almost four hours for the completion of the Moon eclipse. Around two hours, there was a total eclipse, making the Moon in utter darkness in shadow of the Earth.

The lunar eclipse of Wednesday was visible from several countries. Sky-watchers in Central Asia, east Africa, Middle East, Western Australia and some parts of the UK could watch the eclipse partially or totally. In some Latin American countries like Brazil, Uruguay and Argentina, the eclipse was somewhat visible.
