ABSA advises Tlhabane community

Tlhabane/ Rustenburg – ABSA brought its drive to educate the nation on matters relating to financial literacy to Tlhabane last week, where about 100 community members were given valuable lessons on how to manage their income through the bank's 'Bubomi' programme. The programme is being conducted in other parts of the country as well and is part of ABSA's Consumer Education campaign, which is always intensified during the month of July (National Saving's Month). By using the concept of storytelling to share learning experiences in a fun and interactive way, the Bubomi programme educates the community to live within their financial means, work out a practical budget and to avoid the reckless use of credit.

"We hope that the community will receive valuable information about how to save their money and also guard against practices that can contribute to a loss of finances," said ABSA Regional Marketing and Communications Manager – Abie Maphala – in an interview with Platinum Weekly. "When translated, Bubomi means 'That's life'. The community is able to listen to the story of a family who go through different experiences in life in a way that makes it easy for them to understand and know how to handle the situation in die future," added Maphala.

We are the Champions!

Rustenburg – Olympia Park Stadium was the venue of a gala dinner that was held on Saturday July 16 and brought together netball players from all over South Africa on the eve of a tournament that was held at the Royal Bafokeng Sports Palace. The MEC of the Department of Sport, Arts and Culture, MEC H. Chauke gave a keynote address during the gala dinner, and encouraged the participants to enjoy themselves. "We are happy that the event is being held at the Royal Bafokeng Sports Palace and I would like to wish all the participants the best of success." Officials from Netball South Africa (NSA) were also present during the event
