Another mining tragedy...

Carletonville – How safe are the hordes of mine workers that venture underground each week in South Africa? This question is still under the spotlight after two mine workers lost their lives and five others were injured on Thursday July 28 following an accident at Gold Fields' number 7 Shaft at KDC East (formerly Kloof) mine.

The tragedy saw Gold Fields stopping operations at its KDC East and KDC West (formerly Driefontein) mines.

The JSE-listed giant miner said the workers died after an accident following a seismic event measuring 1.6 on the Richter scale. Two of the injured workers were hospitalised, while the other three suffered minor injuries. The Department of Mineral Resources issued a Section 54 stopping both KDC East and KDC West until the mine had completed the statutory investigation and presented the findings to the department. Mr. Sven Lunsche, who is the Corporate Affairs Manager at Goldfields, could not give the latest developments regarding the accident or the date the two mines were likely to resume operations. He referred the Platinum Weekly to a statement released to the media shortly after the accident. Gold Fields CEO, Mr. Nick Holland, said the accident is proof that the company should not compromise its mine safety efforts.
