Cautious parents can from now on be less paranoid when their youngsters use their vehicles, as Ford has installed a newly developed system. An electronic system, which will be installed in all new Ford vehicles from next year, will subjugate drivers to drive on the 'safe side of the law'. This system will reduce the maximum speed as well as the decibels produced by the stereo system. This newly developed safety function, known as "teenage mode" will be affective when the younger drivers use a second key for the vehicle. This system, formerly dubbed as 'MyKey' will allow drivers to the maximum speed of 72 km/h to 130km/h.

When the driver exceeds the speed limit, a verbal warning will be given to lower speed. This voice system will also warn drivers when it's time to re-fuel. According to Ford, 30% of accidents caused by male youths, can be attributed to speeding.
