Information Bill delayed
 The ANC on Monday delayed the introduction of the Protection of Information Bill to the National Assembly. The controversial proposal has now been taken off the order paper for Tuesday's parliamentary meeting. This after a critical ANC caucus meeting was held in Parliament on Monday afternoon...
 Speaking at a media briefing, ANC Chief Whip Mathole

Motshekga made the announcement. Motshekga said many parties have made submissions and they had to be considered for the sake of inclusivity.
 The Right2Know campaign's Dale McKinley said, "What this confirms to us is that there are divisions within the ANC over this bill. It is very clear that they wouldn't pull this from the order to be debated unless there were some problems internally," he added.
 The African Christian Democratic Party's (ACDP) Steve Swart has also welcomed the move. "We as the ACDP have called on the ANC to refer this bill back to the ad-hoc committee with the specific instruction to include the public interest defence clause," he said.
