Aviation History

South African aeronautical company Aerosud have unveiled a South African designed and developed light high-performance aircraft that it says could sell in the "hundreds or thousands" at a cost of less than US$10 million. In the development of the Ahrlac, Aerosud has had the support of South African land defence systems company Paramount, which holds 19% of the aeronautical enterprise. The aircraft is expected to take the civil and military aviation market by storm. Aerosud Managing Director Paul Potgieter says AHRLAC offers a highly flexible form of "clip-on-clip-off" payload system which enables it to be transformed quickly between operational roles.

carry out a wide range of operations including surveillance, policing, border/ coastal patrol and anti-smuggling; armed patrol and counter insurgency operations; disaster relief and emergency supply to remote areas; as well as intelligence gathering. "We have more than strong interest in the aircraft," reported Aerosud MD Dr Paul Potgieter.

Potgieter says AHRLAC is special because it offers maximum platform flexibility for multi-role applications, from basic visual reconnaissance to advanced electronic surveillance, and intelligence, to armed patrol. "The design is modular so as to support maximum basic airframe commonality for the various configurations and rapid role change ability," he says. The Ahrlac project has not received any government funding.

It can stay in the air for 7 to 10 hours, making it the ideal solution for patrolling large land areas, borders and oceans. The two-crew aircraft can
