R16m to train cops

Funds worth R16.2-million have been set aside to train detectives in a move aimed at driving for higher conviction rates, Police Minister Nathi Mthethwa recently said. He said 1384 detectives would be trained during the 2011/2012 financial year.

“The SA Police Service shall continue to ensure that it trains more specialised detectives as well as ensure that current investigators’ training is enhanced.”

In a speech prepared for delivery in Parliament, the minister said the training of detectives would be an ongoing process.

He further warned criminals that the police would be on high alert this festive season. “If they think this is going to be a festive season... how wrong they are; I have instructed police to have no mercy on these scoundrels.”

Mthethwa said there had been 16 834 recorded murders in the 2009/2010 financial year, in which 8547 arrests were made, 3060 of which resulted in convictions. “We need to strive for more convictions around murder cases, which will not only show how serious we are about dealing with this scourge, but equally cement society’s trust in the police,” he said.
