BUSINESS OWNERS BEWARE!

SA – With the festive season fast approaching, the police are urging business owners to avoid keeping large sums of money on their premises as well as to take additional precautionary measures. Burglaries and business robberies are known to increase during the Christmas and New Year holiday season. Maintaining visibility all over their business premises, being discreet when counting cash and bank deposits, avoid giving out personal information to strangers and ensuring that valuables such as purses are safely locked away are among some of the tips which could help keep businesses safe. Be vigilant when opening and closing and make sure that you are accompanied by one or more trusted employees. If possible, invest in a security alarm system with a mobile panic button.

SUPPORTING THE COMMUNITY

Rustenburg – During September, the South African Police Services (SAPS) focused on police safety and service delivery to the public, especially services rendered at the community service centres (CSC) nationally. While visiting the Rustenburg Police Station on 27 September, Petrus Mkhondo, a member of the public living with physical disabilities expressed his gratitude to the police for their professional service. Petrus, who wanted to give an affidavit was swiftly assisted by adjutant officer Sam Mogapi and was in and out of the police station within five minutes.

"Service delivery to the community – like combating and investigating crimes – is one of our primary functions. We strive to ensure that the community always receives professional service," said Rustenburg station commissioner, brigadier Gertrude Modise. The frontline manager is directly appointed by the senior officer on each shift to ensure prompt assistance to the community. The police in the Rustenburg cluster would like to assure the community that they will continue providing professional service throughout the year.

ENOUGH IS ENOUGH!

Rustenburg/ Mooi-nooi – According to Grace Help Centre, three out of four women have been victims of violence in their lifetime. When women become victims of violence, they are not the only ones affected by its negative impacts. The problem affects the socio-economic development of families, communities and society in general. There are three types of violence that affects women and children, namely physical violence that include corporal punishment and bullying; psychological abuse when they are verbally and emotionally abused; and sexual violence and harassment which falls in line with coercion and discrimination. Grace Help Centre is a registered Social Development Care Centre for female victims and children of Gender Based Violence. If you feel you can identify with the signs of abuse and you want to break free, contact Grace Help Centre's crisis line 072 348 6526.
