

EDUCATING CHILDREN ABOUT GENDER-BASED VIOLENCE

Mooiinooi/ Brits – Educating young boys and girls about the importance of showing equal levels of respect to either sex can play a part in ensuring they do not become victims or perpetrators of gender-based violence (GBV). GBV is violence that is directed at an individual based on his or her gender. It includes physical, sexual, verbal, emotional, and psychological abuse, threats, coercion as well as economic and educational deprivation. By keeping open the channels of communication between you and your child, you will give them the confidence they need to confide in you if they feel victimised or are exposed to GBV at school. They will also develop the necessary skills to assist other learners who might need help. Statistics from the United Nations Children’s Fund website are just a small indication of the seriousness of GBV towards girls. According to research, up to 120 million girls from every corner of the world will have experienced sexual violence. On their way to school, in classrooms, at homes, in refugee camps, and on playgrounds – girls experience harassment and violence. Globally, more than eight out of 10 girls experience street harassment before they turn 17. If you feel your child or someone close to you is at risk, please feel free to contact us either through our Facebook page at Grace Help Centre, phone or our crisis line on 072 348 6526.
